CID warns of Government Travel Card phishing scam

From the Criminal Investigation Command

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command, commonly referred to as CID, is warning the greater Army community about a new phishing scam in which criminals are targeting U.S. Government Travel Card holders. Over the last few days, Citi, the Government Travel Charge Card provider, has received calls about cardholders receiving suspicious text messages from 19014140142@VTEXT.COM.

The false text messages state that the cardholder's account will be suspended unless certain information is verified such as the full account number, the Card Verification Value number on the back of the card, the last four digits of the cardholder's Social Security number, and the four-digit PIN. This text message is not a legitimate or official message, and cardholders are advised not to respond to the request for information.

As a precaution, the suspicious phone number from which the text messages originated has been disconnected by the Federal Trade Commission and now has a pre-recorded message informing callers that they may have been involved in a phishing attack. The message also informs callers about the specific type of scam that was employed, what steps to take to see if their account has been compromised, and how to prevent themselves from becoming a potential victim.

Additional information regarding phishing and other Internet scams, as well as general online safety information can be found at www.onguardonline.gov. If you are a victim of a phishing scam, the following actions should be completed as soon as possible to assist law enforcement: — Report the crime to the Internet Crime Complaint Center, or IC3, at www.ic3.gov/default.aspx.

Report the crime to the Federal Trade Commission online at www.ftc.gov/idtheft, by calling (877)-ID-THEFT (438-4338), or by mail to Identity Theft Clearinghouse, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, DC 20580.

CID strongly recommends that Soldiers, civilians and

Event recognizes CFC givers

Furloughs, government shutdown factor in collection efforts

By WALLACE McBRIDE
Fort Jackson Leader

Federal employees and service members from around the Midlands gathered last week at the Officers' Club to recognize the contributions to the region's Combined Federal Campaign.

A preliminary tally shows this year's campaign fell short of its $1.2 million goal for 2013, bringing in almost $800,000 as of last Friday.

It was a complicated year for everybody involved with the CFC effort, thanks to sequestration, furloughs and the government shutdown, said Ann Marie Stieritz, co-chairperson of this year's United Way of the Midlands community campaign.

"Yet many continued to give so unselfishly, and that's why we're here today — to thank you very much, and to celebrate that fact," Stieritz said.

Col. Stephen Yackley, Fort Jackson's deputy commanding officer, said outside factors created setbacks, but that campaign volunteers stepped up to make the best of a bad situation.

"This has put us back a bit on our canvassing of Fort Jackson," Yackley said. "But, with the committed involvement of our leaders across the post, we were able to reach out and give all of our military and civilian personnel an opportunity to participate. An operation of this size is no simple task and takes hundreds of volunteers. I would like to thank everyone who contributed their time and talents to the campaign on the fort."

This year, Fort Jackson command stressed the importance of educating new Soldiers on the importance of CFC efforts. The campaign theme was "Serving our country, supporting our community," which was an apt sentiment for those attending last week's CFC event, said Dean Cousins, CFC co-chairman.

"(As) I look across the room here today, I see a lot of men and women who have indeed stepped up and served our country as members of our armed forces and our civilian federal agencies," Cousin said. "The dollars that we raised also show a real commitment to support our community."

Established by a Presidential Executive Order signed by President John F. Kennedy in 1961, the CFC is the largest workplace charity campaign in the United States and the only campaign authorized to solicit and collect contributions from federal employees in the workplace on behalf of charitable organizations.

Nationally, more than 200 CFC organizations raise nearly $300 million from the federal community each year. The funds are used to support more than 25,000 local, national and international charities.

Nearly four million federal employees and military personnel are able to contribute to the charities of their choice during the charity drive, which runs until the middle of December. Pledges made by Federal civilian, postal, and military donors during the campaign season support nonprofit organizations around the world.

"Our mission was simple, and that was to ask 100 percent of the local federal workforce to demonstrate their commitment to our community," Cousins said. "For those of you here at Fort Jackson, it's about teaching those young Soldiers, and it's about giving something back to an organization larger than themselves - something like the CFC and its participating charities."

DENTAC Soldier finishes Air Assault School

By WALLACE McBRIDE
Fort Jackson Leader

A Fort Jackson dental technician graduated with honors Jan. 17 from the Air Assault School at Fort Benning, Ga.

For Sgt. Jesse Madrid, a dental technician and noncommissioned officer in charge at Caldwell Dental Clinic, finishing the two-week course has been a goal since first enlisting in the Army.

"In my job, we don't do hands-on stuff with helicopters, so I raised my hand when the opportunity came up to send Soldiers to the Air Assault School at Fort Benning," he said. "I thought it would be interesting. When I enlisted, that was the main thing I wanted to do — be a Soldier first. I picked the dental field because I still wanted to be able to use my experience on the outside, whenever I get out as a civilian."

It's unusual to see dental technicians with air assault badges, he said, because their duties are not often called upon for combat situations.

"It was hard for me because there was a lot of hands-on stuff," he said. "I'm pretty good with written tasks and written exams, but hands-on was a little more difficult for me."

The most challenging part of the course was the cold weather, he said. After that, he ranked "sling-load operations" as the second toughest part of the experience.

"It was our hands-on test for inspecting and rigging sling-loads for the helicopters," he said. During this phase of the course, students receive hands-on training on preparation, rigging and inspection of external loads on a helicopter.

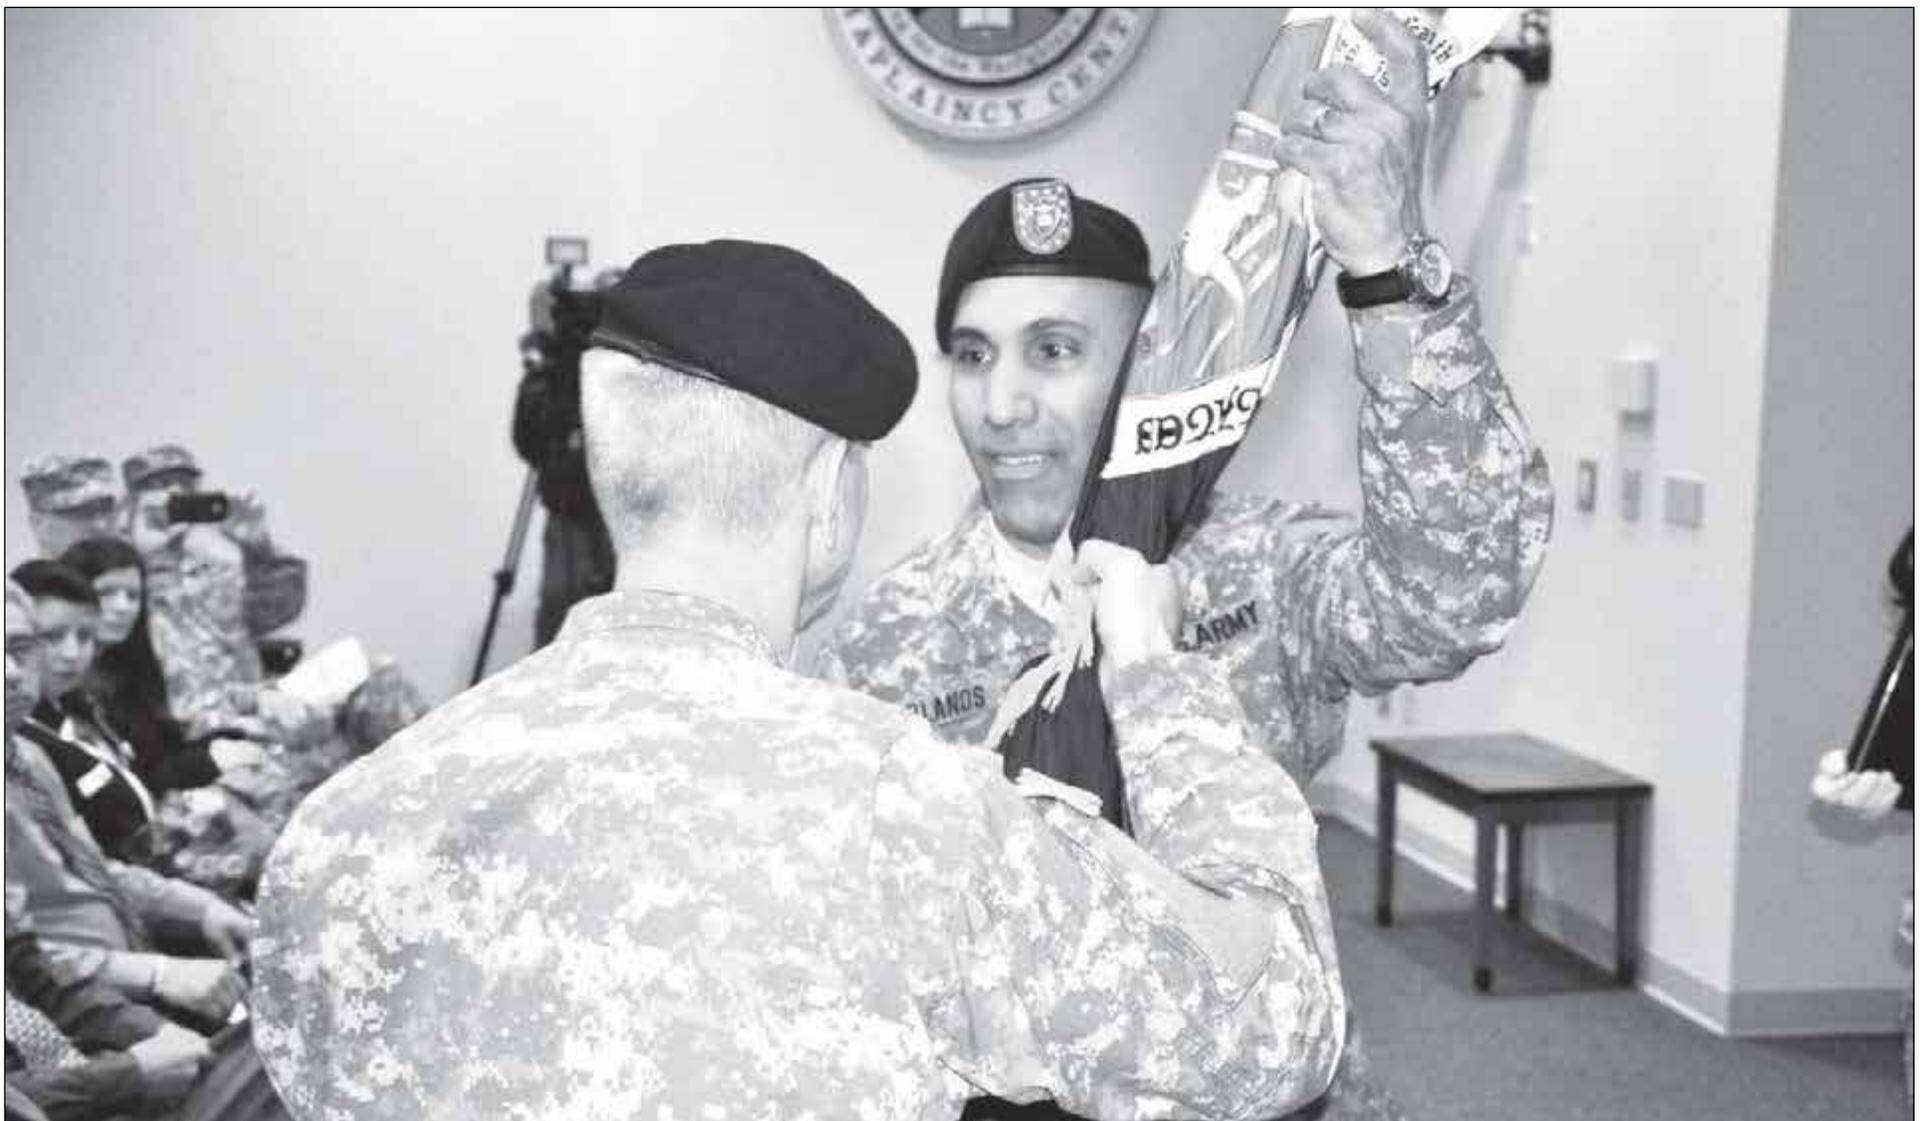

"DENTAC's pride with Sgt. Jesse Madrid's accomplishment knows no bounds," said DENTAC Commander Col. Jamie Houston. "He was not only the DENTAC Soldier of the year, but runner-up for the Regional DENCOM Soldier of the Year last year. The award is huge in the annals of the Army Dental Corps — so rare that we have to check the history books to see when it was last achieved."

An eye on ammo

When it comes to military ammunition, quality control management can be a global effort

By WALLACE McBRIDE
Fort Jackson Leader

Signal flares are designed to function in even the worst of situations. Beneath the cap is a small pin, which fits into place at the base of the canister. Move the cap from the top of the tube to the bottom, aim it toward the sky and give it a good slap, and the flare should launch approximately 700 feet into the air.

That's what happens when it works correctly, which is almost always, said Mike Armour, quality assurance specialist (ammunition surveillance) for Fort Jackson. Occasionally, though, a dud will slip through. And the only way to know if ammunition is faulty is to use it, he said.

"Back in June, there was a malfunction on one of the ranges, the Night Infiltration Course," Armour said. "They had a report of three 'hang fires' — which is when you try to fire a round, and there's a delay in the function. But it will eventually function, and that's a dangerous situation."

Soldiers with the 4th Battalion, 10th Infantry Regiment, who were manning the range, acted quickly to assess the situation, he said. The procedures established for dealing with this kind of situation involve on-post support as well as ammunition inspections around the world. Once Armour is notified, the situation is reported to Joint Munitions Command, where specialists review global stockpile numbers and look for a pattern of malfunction in specific inventory lots.

"They'll determine if they're going to restrict, or possibly suspend, certain lot numbers of ammunition," he said. "Ammunition is tracked by lot numbers, so, basically, if there's a malfunction anywhere in the world, the greater ammunition community is aware of it within 24 to 48 hours."

Prompted by the "hang fire" reports at Fort Jackson, Armour, a quality assurance representative from Picatinny Arsenal, N.J., and members of the 4-10th recently took a closer look at the post's inventory of signal flares.

"We remotely fired 96 flares and shot them off at Bastogne Range," Armour said. "We simply watched the flares to make sure they functioned. If they didn't function, we had arrangements with (Explosive Ordnance Disposal) to police up all non-functioning flares. Luckily, all of them worked."

He said the review found no apparent cause for the flares' previous failures.

"Sometimes, ammunition malfunctions become a mystery," Armour said. "It depends on the type of ammunition and weapons system, but (hang fires) are predominantly very rare. We do a pretty good job of maintaining quality standards in the production of ammunition from the various depots and contractors. The United States has less to worry about in regards to that than many other countries. Unfortunately, with such good quality comes a bit of complacency."

This is where quality assurance specialists come in, he said. It's his job to make sure individual units on post don't take the effectiveness of their weapons for granted.

"I watch ammo," Armour said, summarizing his job responsibilities on post. "Any military explosive that moves in or out of Fort Jackson falls in my lane of responsibility to make sure it's good to go for our troops."

Fort Jackson's ammunition responsibilities don't end with supervising what is used by training units, he said. Fort Jackson services a lot of different companies, from the National Guard to the Marine Corps. "We get everything from 155-mm projectile rounds, to C4-Composition B explosives to 5.56-mm rounds that they're firing out on most of the ranges every day," Armour said.

There is also a certain amount of responsibility placed on units to maintain quality control, he said. The recent signal flare review couldn't have taken place without the support of Company B, 4-10th, he said.

"It was their (executive officer) who stepped up and supported it," he said. "It probably saved the Army a few thousand bucks, at least. Otherwise, we would have had to ship the material off to another installation or depot somewhere to do that same operation."

ACS schedules workshops for teen summer employment

By BARBARA MARTIN
Employment Readiness Program

Are you a teenager and looking for something to do in your spare time this summer? Why not consider summer employment?

Employment opportunities are available on Fort Jackson and in the surrounding areas for diligent and persistent job seekers. It is never too early to begin your job search. The market is saturated with teens who are looking for a summer job. What can make you stand out from the rest is the preparation you have made to ensure employment success. Employers are looking to hire young people with a positive attitude who are reliable and willing to learn new skills.

One tip for landing a summer job is looking for "Now hiring" signs wherever you go. Employers might give teens more consideration for employment if they show up at their door and fill out an application on the spot. You can also go online to www.snagajob.com and find part-time jobs that hire 16-year-olds.

Best areas for finding employment are city-run youth programs, the amusement industry, theme and recreation parks, ice-cream parlors, juice shops, grocery stores, libraries, museums, zoos, fast food and casual dining restaurants, child and elder care services and offices needing clerical or customer service help

Fort Jackson teen summer employment recruitment starts in February. Teens can view jobs at www.usajobs.gov. Jobs generally include food service worker, cashier, laborer, recreation aid and life guard. For specific questions regarding those jobs and the application process, contact the Fort Jackson Nonappropriated Fund Human Resources Office at 751-4259.

Teens can also visit the Army Community Services Employment Readiness website for additional teen employment resources at http://fort-jacksonmwr.com/acs\_emp/teenEmployment/index.html

Teens should also consider volunteering as an option for the summer.

Volunteers will gain valuable experience that can be used on future job applications as well as when applying for college scholarships. The Fort Jackson America Red Cross begins accepting applications for its Teen Summer Volunteer Program in April. For more information about the Fort Jackson Teen Summer Volunteer Program, call 751-6516.

The Fort Jackson Employment Readiness Office will be hosting Teen Summer Employment Preparation workshops during Richland 2 School District non-school days. Workshops will focus on how to prepare a job application and resume, interviewing skills and how to search for jobs. Limited seating is available for each class.

To register, contact the ACS Employment Readiness Program at 751-4862. Workshops are scheduled from 9 a.m. to noon, Feb. 18, March 28 and April 21. Workshop location will be provided at the time of registration. Dates are subject to change if the Richland 2 School District non-schools days schedule is modified.

CAP serves employees with disabilities

From the Department of Defense
Computer/Electronic Accommodations Program

Recognizing the potential of its workforce, the Department of Defense established the Computer/Electronic Accommodations Program, or CAP, to eliminate employment barriers for people with disabilities. CAP's mission, since its inception in 1990, is to provide assistive technology and accommodations to make sure people with disabilities and wounded services members have equal access to the information environment and opportunities in the DoD and throughout the federal government.

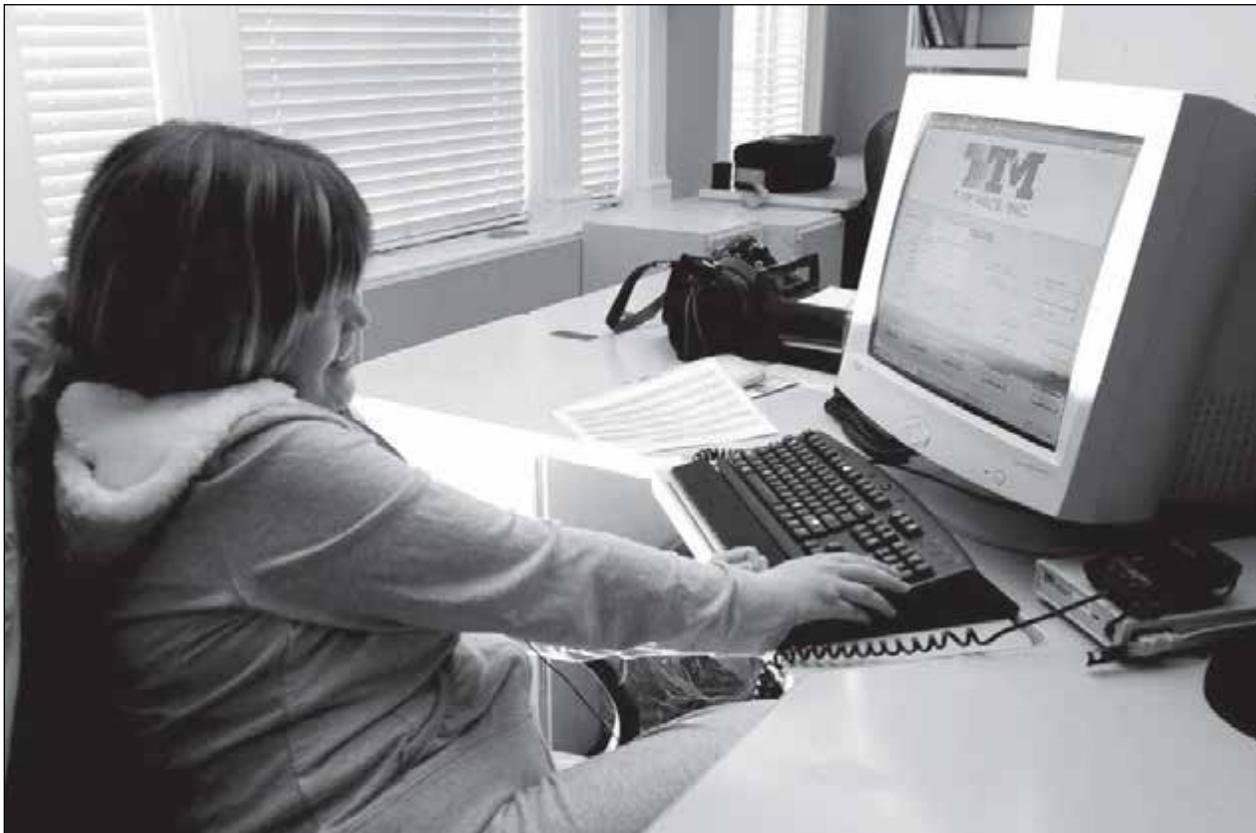

Today, CAP has expanded beyond the DoD to partner with 68 federal agencies, making it the largest provider of reasonable accommodations in the world. The program's vision is to increase employment of people with disabilities and disabled veterans by making sure they have access to accommodations throughout the DoD and federal government.

Through CAP's Wounded Service Member Initiative, CAP provides needs assessments, assistive technology and training to support wounded, ill and injured service members throughout all phases of recovery and transition to employment, directly affecting their rehabilitation process. CAP partners with military treatment facilities to integrate assistive technology into the recovery and transition process.

CAP does this by paying for and providing a variety of assistive technology for people with hearing, visual, dexterity, cognitive and communication disabilities. Although CAP mainly focuses on purchasing assistive technology for employees with disabilities, it also supports federal employees throughout the employment lifecycle, which includes assistance with coming to work, staying at work and returning to work. Frequently requested accommodation solutions include videophones, personal amplification devices, screen magnification software, screen readers, cueing and memory aids, literacy software, alternative keyboards, pointing devices and speech recognition software.

The process to identify and request accommodations through CAP is simple. Customers who already know what accommodations they need can request them through an online request form available at www.cap.mil/wsm (for wounded service members) or at www.cap.mil (for federal employees).

Customers who need solutions identified have several options. The Wounded Service Member initiative team visits a number of military installations throughout the year and conducts on-site needs assessments. CAPTEC, located at the Pentagon, conducts in-person, phone and video teleconference needs assessments. For customers not located in the Washington metro area who need an on-site assessment, one can be requested through the online request form at www.cap.mil/wsm (for wounded service members) or at www.cap.mil (for federal employees). Once solutions have been identified, all requests can be made through the same online request form.

The CAP office is available to answer any disability- or accommodation-related questions. The CAP staff works with individuals to ensure the federal community complies with federal laws and assists in creating a more accessible information environment. CAP is committed to giving service members the tools to prepare them for employment opportunities in the public or private sectors by allowing them to maximize their abilities.

CAP offers a number of online tools to help its customers, including:

- Online training: A series of online training modules to help federal employers understand how simple and beneficial hiring employees with disabilities can be.
- Assistive technology videos: A series of short videos to demonstrate available assistive technology.
- CAP mobile app: Stay up to date on new assistive technology, disability events and more on the go.
- Social media: Stay connected with CAP on Facebook, Twitter and YouTube.

For more information, visit www.cap.mil, contact CAP at 703-614-8416 or via email at cap.wsm@mail.mil (for wounded service members) or cap@mail.mil (for federal employees).

God cares for you in stormy times

By CHAPLAIN (MAJ.) WILLIE MASHACK
U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School

Being in control of one's life is a virtue that is greatly admired in every culture across the world. The discipline of the Soldier, the determined trainee, the devoted health care worker, the dedicated and productive assembly worker — the list of titles and positions can be endless. However, it moves us to look at such people and others who seemingly have it all together and ask, "How do they do it?"

On the other hand, we make rather harsh judgments on people who appear to be out of control in one way or another. To let your emotions get out of control is an embarrassment. When children are out of control it is considered a failure. When the mind is out of control it is an illness. When our finances are out of control it can lead to bankruptcy and ruin. Most people take control very seriously, because without it, life seems to be out of control and in disarray.

But for people of the Christian faith, there is a particular limit to the control we have over our lives. We are responsible for the manner in which we live, but ultimate control and final authority in our lives, rests with God as we know him in Christ Jesus. This can lead to a very difficult dilemma. How can we stay in control of our lives and still have Jesus as Lord of our lives?

Mark 4:35-41 finds Jesus having completed preaching, teaching and healing on the banks of the Sea of Galilee, which is really a lake. After the benediction, he tells the disciples to take him over to the other side. As they are rowing across the water a fierce storm suddenly comes up. The winds are strong, the waves are rough and water is getting into the boat. While all of this is going on, Jesus has his head propped up on a cushion asleep. The disciples become panicky. They rush to Jesus, wake him from his sleep and ask this question: "Do you even care that we are about to drown?"

The disciples are on a trip, not of their choosing but at Jesus' command. They are not alone, but they act as if they were. The world around them suddenly becomes one enormous storm of wind, wave and rising water. Jesus is asleep in the back of the boat. It became too much for them to deal with, and they became overwhelmed with the reality of their situation.

Many of us today are in similar predicaments and feel overwhelmed by the reality of the circumstances. Are you faced with another disappointment or with an unexpected and frightening medical diagnosis? Perhaps you are struggling with financial pressures or are involved in a relationship that seems to be deteriorating and going nowhere fast? Somewhere between the reality of the winds and rising water and fear having replaced their faith, I believe the disciples had to remember, if only for a moment, the power and activities of Jesus in their lives and the life of the community.

Let me remind you today that Jesus cares about you. Some things may seem out of your control, but strengthen your faith and trust in the Lord. Jesus is awakened and immediately displays his power. He stills the storm which calms their fears. It takes humility to recognize that God cares. Sometimes we think that struggles caused by our own sin and foolishness are not God's concern. But when we turn to God in repentance, he will help us with our struggles. Letting God have your anxieties and worries calls for action and involvement. Don't submit to circumstances, but to the Lord, who controls circumstances. God does care, and he is concerned.

Sgt. Nick Cunningham of the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program jumps into the sled to drive Olympic gold medalist and WCAP teammate Sgt. Justin Olsen, Johnny Quinn and Abe Morlu to 16th place in the four-man bobsled event at the International Bobsled & Skeleton Federation's 2013 World Cup stop, Dec. 7, at Utah Olympic Park in Park City, Utah.

Soldiers picked for U.S. bobsled team

By TIM HIPPS
IMCOM

SAN ANTONIO — Five Soldiers in the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program have been selected for the U.S. Olympic men's bobsled team that will compete at the 2014 Olympic Winter Games in Sochi, Russia.

Capt. Chris Fogt, Sgt. Justin Olsen, Sgt. Nick Cunningham, Sgt. Dallas Robinson and Team USA assistant coach 1st Lt. Michael Kohn will represent the U.S. Army in Russia. With the exception of Robinson, everyone in the group has previously competed in the Olympics.

They will be joined by former U.S.

Army World Class Athlete Program, or WCAP, bobsledder Steven Holcomb, the reigning Olympic champion driver in the four-man event. Therefore, the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program had a hand in helping produce about half of the U.S. Olympic men's bobsled squad.

Holcomb, who spent seven years in WCAP, will drive USA-1 with brakeman Fogt and civilians Curt Tomasevicz and Steve Langton aboard. Holcomb also will drive USA-1 in the two-man event.

Cunningham will drive USA-2 with WCAP teammates Olsen, Robinson and civilian Johnny Quinn aboard. Olsen was a member of Holcomb's four-man squad that struck gold at the 2010 Olympic Winter Games in Whistler, Canada.

Cunningham and Corey Butner also will pilot U.S. sleds in the two-man event. The two-man bobsled brakemen will be selected from the pool of six push athletes named to the four-man squads.

A number of components were considered when selecting the 2014 U.S. Olympic Bobsled Team — push athletes, including combine test and U.S. National Push Championship results, U.S. National Team Trials finishes, driver input, proven international experience with a history of results and team combinations working well together, trend of push times, start rank and velocity, and current season results.

Nations were allocated Olympic quotas based on rank in international points following seven competitions during the 2013-2014 season. The U.S. was one of three nations that qualified to enter the maximum of three teams in men's two-man bobsled competition, and one of only two nations to qualify the maximum of three sleds in the women's race. The U.S. was not one of the top three nations in four-man bobsled standings and is limited to two crews.

The Olympic bobsled events are scheduled for a four-heat format over two days of racing. The men's two-man bobsled competition is slated for Feb. 16-17, followed by women's bobsled Feb. 18-19. The men's four-man bobsled competition will be one of the last events of the Olympic Games, set for Feb. 22-23.
